In general my child has improved and is doing really well in comparison to other education provision she is happy and enjoys school any issues have been dealt with quickly ,i would recomend the school

The staff are fantastic, they really do have love for our kids and go far and beyond

Think Homework could be better explained and provided. Confused between ARP and Winchmore homework assignments at times.

Needs more supervision with the children that are more likely to act out, more activities for understanding social behaviours.

So others are not exposed to such behaviours.

Separate more aware children from less aware children During free play.

Challenge children more independently for their educational needs so as to make sure they are progressing academically.

I would consider recommending this school if the child's needs are very high regarding autism.

Keep contact as immediate as possible when there has been an incident at school.

Would be good to see after school clubs - there's so little teens to do

This is only from a few months at the school but we've all been very impressed. Thank you!

I'm not sure that your questions are always helpful. What does "well behaved" mean for autistic young people? What is "doing well" for them? "High expectations" seems a particularly problematic concept. These children clearly will not meet conventionally high expectations, so what is this stock phrase supposed to mean here? If you really want to know what parents think, and this is a laudable wish, then gather some for an in-depth qualitative assessment. This sort of skin-deep, quantitative questionnaire is pretty meaningless really.

No afterschool clubs in this school that every child in mainstream school can attend. School day is already shorter than all mainstream secondary schools, so his life experiences, participation is less and is valued as less.

Always willing to help when in very complex situations, thank you
